

People of the Sault

You are not unaware, you other Iroquois, that we are attached to our father. We live with him and are in his bosom. You sent to us a necklace three years ago to invite us to procure for you a peace. We sent you one in response. We give you another one to say to you that we have worked successfully. We ask no more than that it (this peace) endure and that your side do whatever is necessary for that.

People of the Mountain

You have made us assemble here, our father, all the nations, in order to make a pile of hatchets and to put them in the earth with yours. For me who had none left, I rejoice in what you do here today and I invite the Iroquois to see us as their brothers.
